Had to write this down lest I forget.

The day started out cold and drizzling but the compost pile had to be turned or it would catch fire. I spent about four hours digging it out mixing and repiling in the bin and capping with a little dirt. After completing I went to the house ate some lunch and took a nap, at some point I sat up remembering I left the heater on in the chicken coup, I rushed off out the door across the lot when I noticed it was very foggy, I could only see about ten feet but everything within was clear and sharp. I turned the heater off and saw baby chick was doing well turned and walked back to the house, I don't remember walking up the steps or opening the door, but, I do remember quite clearly as I turned, I see myself sleeping on the couch, instantly every hair stood up like electricity crawling over my skin, I didn't walk but glided to my sleeping body reached out touching myself on the forehead, intently I sat up in shock expecting to see myself standing right there in front of me, nothing. I sat there for a while and the phone rang, I was my neighbor asking what I was up to and if was I going into town. I told him what just happened, he was silent while listening.

He said, It's not often you get to see yourself as you really are.
